

Partnership

Community Partnerships

Never has it been so crucial that the community pull together to “educate a child.” By forming partnerships among employers, service agencies and educational institutions, our community can tap an abundance of existing resources.

These can lend financial, moral and spiritual support so that more students in need can be helped.

Self-Esteem

Students are paid to work. Receiving a paycheck for doing a good job will boost any teenager’s self-esteem. For many, it will be their first job, but their skill training and learned work ethic can last a lifetime. They also receive the benefits of a mentor and a counselor, plus the scholarship potential of a free college class and text books.

Supervised Homework Time

One half-hour of each work day is devoted to homework and guided by the job site mentor/supervisor. This is a direct attempt to link education with employment, motivating and assisting students to complete assignments and keep up with their studies. Library facilities and computers are made available to students for homework time.

“I learned how to write better on my essays. Another thing is that I now know how to file papers and do general office duties”

- high school senior