Financial Stress

WHAT IS FINANCIAL STRESS?

For many people, money is a major cause of stress. The details of each person's situation may vary, but most people know what it's like to feel anxious about money. For some people, the daily challenge of earning enough money to pay a given week's bills is the biggest source of financial stress. Others feel financial stress because they are unemployed or in jobs that they dislike and are trying to save money for retirement. In some families, people argue constantly about how to spend the money they have, who controls it, and how to earn more. These stresses cause marital conflict and are very often a factor in divorce.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM FINANCIAL STRESS?

People who feel financial stress tend to be in worse health than those who are in control of their finances. Financial stress can result in

---

SEE THESE HANDBOUTS ON RELATED TOPICS

Building Your Self-Esteem
Depression
Developing Your Personal Negotiation Skills
Expressing Your Feelings Reasonably
How to Set Goals
Living a Responsible Life
Managing Angry Feelings
Managing Anxiety
Work Stress

---

WHERE CAN I GO FOR MORE INFORMATION?

Debtors Anonymous (debtorsanonymous.org).
insomnia, mood disorders, inability to concentrate, and cardiac problems.

Warning signs that point to current or future financial stress include the following:

1. Finding it nearly impossible to meet basic financial agreements; living from one paycheck to the next
2. Being confused about your financial circumstances, such as being unaware of monthly expenses, account balances, and other financial obligations
3. Being in a constant financial crisis, such as bouncing checks, making only the minimum payment each month on a credit card, and using one credit card to pay another
4. Having a pattern of taking personal risks, such as by letting health and car insurance coverage lapse because you lack money
5. Focusing on today and ignoring tomorrow, such as by lacking a plan for retirement savings and one for tax and other inevitable expense payments—and feeling surprised when these expenses are due
6. Spending compulsively, such as buying things—even when you don’t need them—because they are bargains, buying on impulse, and buying things only to leave them in your drawer or closet unused
7. Expecting yourself to buy everything your children want because you never had those things yourself as a child
8. Expecting to keep up with your friends and neighbors
9. Worrying constantly about your bills
10. Developing physical symptoms, such as headaches and ulcers, as a result of money worries

11. Arguing frequently with your partner about money and spending
12. Avoiding any discussion of finances because of the anxiety it causes you
13. Attempting desperately to earn money by working overtime at a job for which you are overqualified
14. Fantasying that you will be rescued from your financial woes

WHAT CAUSES FINANCIAL STRESS?

Financial stress can be caused by several factors, the most common of which are the following:

- Not planning ahead. Living day-to-day seems inevitable to many people, and planning ahead may be difficult. But when emergencies and unexpected losses happen, the person who has no emergency fund to fall back on will experience much greater stress than the person who has planned ahead.

When emergencies and unexpected losses happen, the person who has no emergency fund to fall back on will experience much greater stress than the person who has planned ahead.

Spending too much. In the American culture, we are under tremendous pressure to spend money on things we don’t really need. Because it is easy to confuse acquiring things with happiness, plenty of people get caught up in spending habits that can quickly spin out of control. When one person in a relationship indulges in this behavior, it places enormous stress on the relationship with his/her partner and other family members.

It is easy to confuse acquiring things with happiness.

Spending to satisfy self-esteem needs. We might know people who have plenty of money but whose lives lack satisfaction and joy. Maybe you’ve experienced a time in your life when you felt empty or dissatisfied and bought things in an attempt to feel better. Some retailers even take advantage of this common behavior by encouraging us to indulge in “retail therapy.”

WHAT CAN I DO TO PUT AN END TO FINANCIAL STRESS?

1. Explore your values—the basic beliefs that guide your life. Write them down and discuss them with your partner and family. Compare your values with your spending behavior. You are likely to feel anxious and disappointed in yourself where the values are out of sync.
2. Set goals for all areas of your life, including money.

Compare your values with your spending behavior. When they are out of sync, you are likely to feel anxious and disappointed in yourself.